RECEIVES WITH MRS. COOLIDGE

The following extract from the Andover (Mass.) Townsman will be of interest to the many friends of Mrs. Parington, and her daughter, Mrs. John Voorhis Holt, who still have a strong hold upon the affection of Bethel people. Mrs. Holt will be remembered as one of the most brilliant and enthusiastic of our former Andover teachers.

"Mrs. John V. Holt, of Bartlett street, was the presiding officer at the President's Conference of the Congregationalist Women's Association of Massachusetts, which was held at Northampton on Friday last. In this capacity she received the visiting delegates with Mrs. F. H. Hage, the guest of honor of the conference, and acted as her hostess at the general luncheon given at the Edwards church."

During the luncheon Mrs. Coolidge took a moment to write a very friendly letter greeting to Mrs. J. C. Parington. Mrs. Coolidge mentioned Mrs. Parington whom she saw on her visit to Andover at the recent annual of Phillips Academy last May.

"Mrs. Holt has been president of the conference ever since its inception several years ago, and has contributed largely to its development from a Greater Boston organization to one of state-wide extent. The program was of unusual interest, including addresses by well known speakers and open discussions on methods and programs found successful in church work."

WATERFORD

Mrs. Annie Grover Pike (Mrs. John Pike) has gone with her baby from Dr. Hubbard's, her mother's home on a grocery farm.

Last week Dr. R. E. Hubbard took his young son Rexford to Portland for an operation for adenoids.

Good progress is now being made on the new church and community house to replace the one burned a year ago.

In excavating for the foundation of the Community House, indications of a permanent water supply for the new church plant were found. If this can be developed, it will be a great convenience, as the old plant had no water system.

The Dudley family have returned from Florida and they are preparing for the next summer season at the Lake Shore House.

Last week Friday the Eastern Star served a supper in the Masonic Hall in honor of the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Hamlin. Mr. and Mrs. Hamlin have spent their last century of wedded life on their farm near Lake Umbagog and the village. Gifts were made by the Star and the Congregational Parish and community.

Mrs. Alice Wolfe and Miss H. E. L. Moore have returned to their winter home at South Waterford.

Archibut John Howard Stevens of the firm of Stevens and Son of Portland was in town last week in connection with the work on the new church and community house.

New line of House Dresses, $1.98, $2.98, $3.98.

Mrs. Clifford Henderson of Falmouth, Mrs. Miley Campbell of Falmouth were guests of Mrs. Charles Merrill and family Saturday.

Mrs. Everett McKee, who has been the widow with her daughter in Portland, is visiting her father, C. F. Morgan and sister, Mrs. Mabel Allen.

Mr. and Mrs. William Edwards of Rockport, Mass., were in town Friday. Mrs. Angella Clark and Jessie Clark returned with them for a week's visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Richardson and Mesdames, Mrs. Hannah Yates and daughter, Ten, and Edith Burrey of Newbury were guests of Mrs. Jack McMillin Sunday.

MUNDT-POTTER

Ernest A. Mundt of Bethel and Miss Ina Potter of Montreal, Quebec, were united in marriage at West Paris, Friday, May 24, by Rev. Eleanor B. Forbes.

Mrs. Mundt is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Potter of Montreal. She was graduated from Gould Academy in the class of 1926 and since then has taught at Locke's Mills Grammar School.

Mr. Mundt is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mundt of Bethel. He was graduated from Gould Academy in 1923 and attended Colby College for a time. The past two winters he has been in St. Petersburg, Florida, working at Waterford during the summer months.

Mr. and Mrs. Mundt will make their home at Waterford this summer where Mr. Mundt has employment.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.
PRESIDENT HOOVER'S commission on law enforcement has been appointed and is about to begin its momentous task of investigating the evils and failures of federal judicial

With the exception of Miss Con-stock, every one of these is an eminent lawyer, and three of them, Loech, Baker and Pound, have had special experience in crime investigation. The one woman on the commission is also the sole representative of the laity, and some regret has been expressed that there is no one to share with her this great responsibility.
Not one of the members has been actively identified with either the wet or the dry, although Judge Kenyon is generally regarded as the champion of the prohibitionists. Three of the commissioners—Baker, Grubb and Lemmon, are Democrats.

Though the scope of the commission's activities is by no means limited to inquiry into enforcement of the prohibition law, this phase of the investigation is looked upon as the most important, and it is certain to be the most interesting to the people of America. Already the dry and wet organizations are marshaling their forces and preparing to present before the commission all the facts and arguments of their command. Mr.
Flower invited the members of the commission to eat luncheon at the White House and listen to his outline of the scope and purposes of their inquiry.

Reversing a lower court decision and annulling an order, the Supreme court decided that the interstate commerce commission must revise its while method of setting railroad rates to reach a more fair rate making. Years of work by the commission must be done over again in full or in part. Freight rates and the cost of transportation must be considered by the commission in setting the basis of railroad transportation, the court ruled. This changes the present situation now used by the commission. Rates are based on distance and tons shipped.

As fast as it was believed this decision would bring about higher passenger and freight rates, but later this was denied. The immediate effect on the New York Stock exchange was sharp.

FORMER SENATOR IRVINE L. LENIHOOT'S appointment to a federal judgeship was finally confirmed by the senate despite the determined opposition of a number of radicals. Soon thereafter a newspaper published what purported to be the roll call by which this action was taken in executive session, and this stirred up a row that has resulted in the barring of news service reporters from the floor of the senate. This step was taken by the rules committee and reported to the senate with a resolution censuring the unnamed senator or senate employee who had disclosed the roll call. After considerable discussion, Vice President Curtis announced that while news service reporters have been accorded the privilege of the floor "by courtesy for half a century or more," the rule specifying the persons entitled to admission will be rigidly enforced in the future.

GOVERNOR'S ISLAND and part of the financial district of New York were theoretically devastated by bombs dropped by the army's huge Keystone bomber which made a non-stop flight of 600 miles from the headquarters of the army air maneuvers at Fairford, Ohio. Next day the bomber returned to the metropolis accompanied by a smaller biplane from which it was successfully refueled while in flight.

WHILE the senate and house conferees continued in deadlock over the export duty scheme in the senate's farm relief measure, the Republican members of the house tried to fix up their tariff bill so it would be assured of passage. There was a lot of hot selling and various trades were engineered. It was said duties would be placed on hides, leather and shoes and those on a number of farm products increased. Every effort was being made by the leaders to prevent a vote on the floor of the house on amendments for a reduction in the protection duty on sugar or for the restoration of cement, brick, shingles and lumber to the free list. The Michigan automobile industry together with other industries using alcohol, such as manufacturers of drugs and paints, were reported to have attempted over Illinois and Iowa corn growers who have been seeking a duty on the ketchup business high enough to stimulate the use of corn in the manufacture of alcohol.

FOREIGN ministers of the little entente held a conference in Belgrade in which, according to official announcement, a complete accord was reached on all questions. A treaty of arbitration was signed and the other treaties among the nations were prolonged. The nations all entered protest against any reduction of reparations amounts.

THE society of the League of Nations at The Hague has awarded Grotius medals to Frank B. Kellogg, former secretary of state, and Sir Eric Drummond. The Grotius medal was instituted in 1925, to be granted each year thereafter to ten persons for work done in the promotion of peace.

RECENT disclosures of the activities of the International Paper and Power company in financing newspapers, made during the investigation by the federal trade commission, inspired Senator George Norris of Nebraska to deliver in the senate a long address in which he urged legislation to prevent the acquisition of newspapers by public utilities concerns and to curb the expansion of such corporations. The Nebraskan scored President Hoover for putting Lenroot on the federal customs appeals bench, and bitterly denounced Samuel Incoll, the Chicago public utility magnate.

CHILE and Peru are immensely relieved by the settlement of the old Tacna-Arica dispute, which was formally announced in Washington. The agreement reached was that proposed by President Hoover. Under its terms Tacna is awarded to Peru and Arica to Chile. The city of Arica, the only port of call for steamers on the Tacna-Peru coastline, is awarded to Chile, but Peru is to have the rights of a free port there. Chile has agreed to erect a railroad station, a custom house, and a wharf at Arica for the use of Peru. Chile also agrees to pay Peru $5,000,000.

Bolivia, which had hoped for an outlet to the sea through the port of Arica, alone is dissatisfied with the settlement.

DR. ALBERT VÖGELIEN, secretary of the German Federation of Industries, has resigned from the German committee of the conference of

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

DANGER

"Danger!" the sign at the roadside announced, and then in explanation, "slippery pavement." The road looked quite safe. It was level and smooth and through an open country which gave one a clear view of the path ahead. But there were on the roadside as we wheeled along—small white crosses.

Which in Ohio indicate that here some traveler has met an accidental death. Eighteen of them I counted within a space of a few miles. Their presence there was a warning and told vividly the tragic story that in spite of the danger sign, some one and then another had thought that even though the road were treacherous and full of danger he knew better than his predecessors how to guide the machine and to steer clear of accident and yet every month or two another cross is added to the list.

It was dark before we reached Columbus, and occasionally we would come upon cars parked on a side road with no light burning. The spot light turned on the apparently abandoned machine revealed young people within, their arms about each other, happy apparently, and unconscious of passing by. They were quite able to take care of themselves, these eighteen-year-olds, I am sure they would have said, but it is a slippery road upon which they are traveling and along the roadside, if they were not blinded by the light of their own passions, there could have been seen the little white crosses marking the spots where virgins and self-control and true love had set their deaths. Some escape mortal disaster, but there is danger real and imminent.

I have had a long experience with those who know when and how to stop, and I know that the road is slippery. There is danger and white crosses mark the path.

"Experienced Only"

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

BRADLEY RICHARDS did not realize that, at the time he left Dightonville for the city, he was greatly looked up to by all the small girls in town.

His reputation as the star football man on the local high school team, the swaggy way in which he strode about the streets, his charming profile as seen at the movies or Sunday school entertainments, had endeared him to a dozen youthful hearts, the most faithful of which was Sally Marbury's.

Five years in the city modified Bradley's swaggy but did not change his profile nor erase his memory from Sally's dreams. Not, however, that he remembered Sally! Even when she was most worshipping from the side lines or across the aisle, he had been unconscious of her very existence.

His success at football had not followed him in business. One job after another had been tried out and he was embarking on his fifth venture when the letter telling of his uncle's sudden death back in Dightonville reached him.

"Now he has left you," wrote his old friend and lawyer, "the house he was born and died in and the store that gave him his living."

He got out of the Dightonville train the following afternoon. His throat tightened when he crossed the threshold of the old white house. After all, it had been his home for years.

It was when he went down to the store, however, that he was seized by an idea.

He hadn't made good in the city. Suppose he took over this downtown-the-hills emporium with its out-of-date stock and re-established it and tried to make a success of it.

To be sure, he knew nothing about the dry-goods business. He would have to have an experienced clerk.

Next morning there appeared in the Dightonville Star an advertisement: "Wanted—A clerk in Richards' dry-goods emporium. Experienced only need apply."

That afternoon a special delivery letter reached him. It read: "Dear Mr. Richards:

"I am applying for the position of clerk in your store. (By the way, don't you think it would sound more modern to call it a Department Store instead of an Emporium?)

"If you will hold this position open for three days, or even two, I will be at liberty and will call on you.

"I am sure you are going to be a success.

"Yours truly,

"S. MARBURY"

That afternoon Bradley went across the street to the one other store in town handling the same sort of stock as his uncle. Bradley's old classmate, Dick Endicott, now owned and ran it and Bradley was anxious to strengthen relations before any spirit of rivalry should affect it.

He was leaving, after a pleasant chat in the office with Dick, when he passed a strikingly pretty girl looking up at him from her typewriter. Their glances met and the girl blushed furiously.

Three days later she walked into his store and applied for the job as clerk. She said she was the S. Marbury who had written to him.

But Bradley shook his head. "I'm very sorry," he said, and meant it, "but I don't want to start business by firing my neighbor's clerk."

For a moment Sally seemed startled. Then at a loss for what to say. Finally, "I was going to leave anyhow," she declared. "Mr. Endicott knew it. I assure you he will be glad rather than sorry."

Somewhat or other, Bradley got the idea from the tone of her voice that she had been discharged. The thought gave him a fellow-feeling of sympathy. He had been discharged and knew how she felt. He gave her the job.

In the days that followed Bradley frequently patted himself on the back for having had sufficient perspicacity to hire a clerk with "experience." Instinctively, she seemed able to gauge the needs of her townsmen and to advise Bradley in his business accordingly.

But not until Sally had been working for him for some time was he able to pin her down as to the extent of her experience.

They were standing one day in the doorway of the store and from some nearby garden drifted the scent of lilacs.

"How long," asked Bradley, "do you work for Dick?"

She didn't answer for a minute. Then, "Three days," she said at last. "Three days?"

"Oh, I'll explain! When I signed advertisement I made up my mind to land the job. I hadn't a speck of experience, but Dick married my cousin and I teased him into letting me work three days for him so that I could say I could be eligible."

Bradley regarded her curiously. How lovely she was! But why had she, an only child of a well-to-do father, been so anxious to work for him?

"Sally," he said impulsively, "why don't you try something more romantic than dry-goods partnerships? I'd love you, Sally!"

And happily Sally saw her old dream fulfilled.

SOUTH WATERFORD

Mrs. Ernest Brackett and friend, Mrs. Tyson of West Medford, Mass., who visited at Mrs. Brackett's brother's, Chas. Nelson's, for several days left for home on Tuesday, May 21st. Mrs. Florence Nelson and little Malcolm returned with them for a visit of two weeks.

MRS. CLARA F. SARGENT
Mrs. Clara F. Sargent passed away in the City Hospital in Boston, Mass., on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, May 21, after an illness of two weeks. She was stricken with a shock, followed by pneumonia. She had been in failing health for several years.

Mrs. Sargent was the only daughter of the late Charles W. and Matilda Perry of Waterford.

She was born on the Chandler Perry farm on April 19, 1868. At the age of nine years she came to the village to live. She was educated in the local schools and Bridgton Academy. For a time she taught in the towns of Norway, Norway and Waterford. Following her teaching she spent three years with her uncle, William Lyman, Waterford, Mass., doing the bookkeeping in his market. Later she worked at the Waltham watch factory. She was married to W. Dana Sargent of Waterford, Mass., at her home in North Waterford July 21, 1887. Her married life was spent in Waltham. Two years later her husband died and she moved her home with her mother. Part of these years were spent as matron of the Orphans' Home in Portland and practical nursing till her health became impaired.

The remains were brought from Watertown, Mass., and the funeral was held on Thursday afternoon at two o'clock. Rev. H. H. Holland of Bridgton spoke words of comfort to the bereaved family. The beautiful flowers spoke of love and respect.

She leaves a mother of 88 years and many cousins to mourn her loss. She was laid to rest in the family lot in Elm Vale cemetery.

ANYTHING LESS THAN THE BEST IS SOLD AT A DISCOUNT

There is an old and very true saying that "What the eye doesn't see, the heart doesn't fancy," but it is also true that the eye sees many things that blind the heart to that which it otherwise would fancy.

How often have you seen a blemish on the face of an otherwise beautiful woman, so noticeable that whenever you looked at her, you could not keep your eye off the blemish? She might be wonderfully groomed, marvelously gowned, and exquisitely coiffed, but try as you might, you could only see the mar.

The appearance of anything either repels or invites ownership. Eighty per cent of those things sold today are purchased through, or the purchase is influenced by, the eye. What a thing looks like, therefore, is extremely important in creating a desire in the minds of others for it.

The appearance of a town is just as important as the appearance of a package, the appearance of a show window, clothing, or anything that is purchased in the store or on the market.

Why do they put colored picture wrappers on cans of beans, corn or tomatoes? It doesn't make the contents of the can any better. Why do automobile manufacturers spend so much time, care and money on the exterior appearance of the motor car? It doesn't make the motor run any smoother or last any longer, or make the car ride any easier. Any package, even though the contents be unharmed, depreciates in value

A Great War Hero

There is a story of gallantry and heroism—of Count Felix von Luckner, who disrupted Allied shipping on two oceans, gambling with his own life many times, but without taking that of any foe. Lowell Thomas, who writes his story, says he is the most romantic and mysterious figure produced by the Central Powers, in the World War; one fit to stand alongside of that other great figure of Thomas' recounting, Lawrence of Arabia. Do not miss the story, "COUNT LUCKNER, THE SEA DEVIL."

The Verdict
A prominent politician who has a grand oratorical style is generally known by his Christian name, which happens to be Charles.
One day he rose before a crowded meeting and in a forceful and solemn tone began his speech as follows:
"Heaven is my witness, and you my fellow countrymen, are the jury."
Here came an oratorical pause, and then the silence was suddenly broken by a high-pitched voice ringing down from the gallery:
"You're guilty, Charles!"—London Answers.

Her Idea
Little Mary, almost six years old, came home from kindergarten all thrilled, happily saying:
"I modeled in clay today, mother."
"Well, Mary," said mother, "What did you make?"
"Oh, I made the Statue of Liberty."
"Why, dear," said mother, "you never saw the Statue of Liberty."
"I know that," replied Mary. "I just made it anyway and put a pipe in his mouth."

Cat Long Considered

Emissary of Witches

Cats have bulked large in the thought of both the Old world and the New. During the first of the more notable witch trials at Chelmsford, England, in 1566, it was charged that a white-spotted cat named "Sathan," which sucked blood, had taken the form of a toad and caused the death of a man who happened to touch it. An injunction widely followed was that cats must be kept away from a corpse to prevent them from mutilating it or from "taking the soul of the dead." Increase Sather wrote: "There are some who, if a cat accidentally comes into the room, though they may neither see it nor are told of it, will presently be in sweat and ready to die away." In eastern Kansas a cat washing her face before breakfast foretells rain; in western Maine a storm is assured if a cat scratches a fence; in Selly Cove, Newfoundland, tradition asserts that when a cat drowns in salt water, show-ers from the heavens may be expected.

British Monarch's Title

James I wished to use the title of "King of Great Britain" instead of "King of England and Scotland," and even went so far as to have it placed on his coins. In 1604 he asked parliament to consent to the new title but fears were expressed lest the laws and liberties of England might be jeopardized and the commons urged that some agreement as to the terms of union precede assumption of the title. James finally yielded to the advice of his minister, Robert Cecil, and the change was deferred. The title did not receive parliamentary sanction until the Act of Union, 1707.

Strange Indian Tribe

The Peet River Indians, a tribe living in the Upper Yukon country are a puzzle to ethnologists. These Indians are as black as negroes, but have long straight hair and aquiline features. They are proud of their blood and permit no mixed marriages. Whether they are an offshoot of the Hindu race or descendants of a people who came up the Mackenzie from the Arctic has never yet been established. Today the tribe numbers several hundred and is in prosperous circumstances. Like the Seminoles of Florida, however, they are vanishing because of their antipathy toward intermarriage with other Indians.

Selling a town—and to keep pace with modern times it must be sold in like selling anything else. Therefore, how your town looks is of vital importance. There are few towns that are not very much like the "otherworldly beautiful woman"—their beauty is so marred by blemishes that the beholder cannot see the attractiveness for looking at the scars.

Do your part—set an example by eliminating the scars, the blemishes of your corner and others will do likewise. It's poor business to allow the value of your community to be discounted by a poor appearance.

If the cover is soiled, torn, or the least bit mutilated, furniture with the least scratch; a suit though never worn, that has faded, a book with a broken cover; a shirt with a torn tail, are less than the best, and so sold at a discount. A perfect animal with a skin blemish never takes the prize.

Look around you and see all those things that are made to look attractive, in fact, that you may be attracted thereby—then, think of your town.

The picture of many communities would serve well for a puzzle picture of "What's Wrong Here?" Stand back and take a good look at the picture of your own town, your factory, your store, your office building, your factory. Does it look good or are you half way ashamed of it? Are you proud of it, or do you apologize for the looks of it when company calls or people start talking about it?

WERE ON THE SAME SALARY

(By D. J. Walsh)

IT WAS so beautiful in Sue Biddle's eyes that she could not leave it long enough to go to the kitchen where unwashed breakfast dishes and other tasks called her. It was only an old-fashioned chest of drawers which she had picked up for a song and Cal had rubbed down and stained and polished until it was rich and smooth and glossy as mahogany should be to look its best. Computed in mere dollars it had cost little, but computed in work and appreciation it had cost almost as much as it was actually worth and that was a good deal.

There was the sound of an opening door, a guy "no-no!" and Sue's next-door neighbor, Helen Chandler, entered.

"Why, you're all dressed up!" Sue exclaimed, making a flashing survey of Helen's appearance. Strapped shoes, silk stockings and a dark silk frock gave Helen a distinctly social air.

"I'm not dressed up at all. This old dress happens to be fit for nothing but the ragbag, but I thought I'd get a bit more wear out of it by using it around the house. As for my feet—"

"Helen sank into a chair and thrust her feet up before her—never let my feet go the way some do. It ruins your arches, to wear old shoes."

Sue, flushing, promptly tucked her shabby brown oxfords as far out of sight as possible. Helen's feet looked charming. As for the dress—it might be old now, but it had been brand new just a little while before.

"What do you think of our acquisition?" she asked.
Helen looked at the chest of drawers carelessly.

"Old, isn't it? I hate old things. I'd rather have new any day. Have you seen that parlor suite in White-taker's front window? It's the swell set thing, I think—black and lavender. I told George that I'd jump into the brook if he didn't get it for me, but he said, nothing doing. He's simply got to have a new suit of clothes. Since he joined that swell club he's getting too stuck on himself for anything. And of course I have to have things to make me presentable with such a stylish husband. I got me a new crepe—some class to it, I'll tell you. But the price—I nearly fainted away when she said sixty-five dollars."

"I'm making—" Sue paused. She would be assumed to bring out that volute picked up on the bargain counter and carefully designed by herself. She had a knack of sewing, but, of course, she could never hope to make a frock that would look like Helen's sixty-five dollar crepe.

Suddenly Sue felt a little depressed. The Chandlers seemed to get such a lot more out of life than she and Cal did. They went everywhere, they owned a car, they were in with a gay, stimulating, fashionable crowd. And George was pretty sure of a promotion that would mean increased salary. At the present moment he and Cal were drawing the same amount. Yet Cal insisted on conservation. They had a budget which they adhered to strictly. Every week so much went into the savings bank. Sometimes Sue would have relaxed, but Cal never.

"If you come out only one penny ahead you're an capitalist! If you come out one penny behind you're a spend thrift," was his favorite quotation.

Helen sat there the whole morning. She told about a luncheon she had been to yesterday and of a motor trip on Sunday with the Bassetts, when George had to stand treat at the Arlington for chicken and shortcake. And they were going to a party on Friday night. It sounded gay and carefree and delightful to Sue, who had been obsessed by the humble problem of cooking a shank bone in a new way so as to disguise the fact that it was shank bone. An extravagance of asparagus had reduced her allowance materially.

"One thing more," Helen said as she arose to go—"It is lunch time. Isn't it? But I'm only going to open a can or two—we are talking about moving. There's a house next to Mrs. Bassett's which will be empty the first of the month. George will surely have his raise by that time, and, although the price is steep, I think we can manage it. It's really the most fashionable neighborhood in this section of town."

Sue had nothing to say. She went to the kitchen and bent over the pot of shank bone. It seemed so old somehow. Not only the shank bone, but the whole business of living. She had been married three years, and as far as she could see they were no better off than the Chandlers, who, married the same length of time and receiving the same income, had prettier furniture, good times, a car even.

However, any mood of that sort could not long continue with one as sane and sound as Sue.

"What a nasty little gutter I'd be if I ever complained of Cal's way," she told herself. "He's splendid. He is worth a whole road full of George Chandlers. And I hope he prefers too to Helen, although she is awfully chic and pretty."

"Cal came in quickly, alert, vigorous, sniffing lunch eagerly."

"I smelled that stuff when I turned the corner," he said, giving Sue three kisses, one on each cheek and one squarely on her tempting mouth. "It looks good. Some cook I've got."

Sue smiled as she dished up the humble shank bone disguised as a rich and fragrant ragout. There was apple pie, too, and small crisp biscuits perfectly browned. It was good to see the appetite Cal brought to his food. Never mind if that streak of Scotch in him came out in a tendency to save, he was a splendid man and—she loved him.

She showed him the volute nearly completed and he praised it.
"We'll have to celebrate when you get it finished," he said. "I'll tell you, we'll take a little run out to Westville to see your sister. How does that strike you?"

Sue's glowing joy showed how that struck her.

"By the way, Pass," Cal said as he finished his second piece of pie, "I've got something nice to tell you. There's a dandy house for sale out on Peach street—the Mayhew house next to Joe Bassett's. Mayhew has decided to sell it instead of renting it. He'll take half down and the rest in easy payments. I told him we'd think it over and if you like it, all right. Can you go out there this afternoon? Get Helen to go with you. Pay her carriage."

"Oh, Cal!" Sue was excited. "That's the very house Helen was telling me about this morning. They expected to rent it—"

"Well, you know George didn't get that raise," Cal said coolly. "Pryson got it. He told me this morning—George did. But the head of that company is sure a conservative fellow. He picks for wear every time. I'm sorry for George. He's knocked out. Seems he contracted a lot of debts on the strength of that raise—well, he asked me for a loan—"

"How much?" Sue was vibrating with emotion. How right Cal was. Poor Helen. It was sickening even to think of her disappointment. And now to take the house she wanted—

"Twenty dollars. Something pressing, probably. I let him have it. I know I am a fool," he grinned. "He never pays back, still—You won't scold me, Sue?"

Sue's eyes filled with tears. Across the little table she held out her hands and Cal clasped them.
"Cal! You're wonderful." Secretly she decided to squeeze a little in two or three places to make up for that loan, and Cal she knew would do the same.

"You're the wonderful one," Cal returned warily. "Willing to let me apportion our finances and abide by the consequences. I knew you'd have to skip, Sue—I'm sorry for George. I'm sorry for every fellow who isn't a Sue to help him. George's hands are tied, really, with Helen—"

But Sue, glowing with the thought of having a real home where moving day would be unknown, felt more sorry for Helen.

Flour From Apples

Experiments are reported of the manufacture of flour from apples in the Pacific Northwest, and it is felt in some quarters that this project will show considerable development. It requires seven tons of apples to make one ton of flour. A baking company is now making and selling cookies manufactured from this by-product. Shipments have gone as far east as Chicago, and the cookies seem to meet with favor. Because the apple flour contains no gluten, much experimentation was necessary to determine the right percentage of wheat flour to combine with the apple product in order to bake properly.

Useful Little Animal

Victim of Ignorance

The shrew is a tiny animal which is to be found in many parts of the world, but not in great numbers anywhere for the reason that it is, like the snake, greatly misjudged and is killed on sight by persons who are familiar with the superstitions surrounding it. This diminutive animal devours insects of all kinds and in this respect it is of great benefit to farmers in particular and mankind in general. In a book published in 1653 it is mentioned that the common shrew "is a ravenous beast . . . it beareth a cruel mind, desiring to hurt everything there is no creature that it loveth. They are fraudulent and take their prey by deceit and a lot more."

It was believed that the shrew poisoned cattle. In some English country districts it is still thought that if one passes over the foot of a man or touches a foot of a beast lameness is brought on.

The cure for this is a cruel one. A shrew is captured, a hole is bored in an ash tree, and the live animal is pushed in. The entrance of the hole is sealed. When it is supposed that the shrew's body is decayed sufficiently, the hole is opened, a twig inserted, and if this is passed over the lame part the man or beast is supposed to recover. It is difficult to believe that such ancient superstitions are still observed in some of the distant country districts.

Arab Flute Players

Masters of Melody

The flute is the most interesting of all the Arab instruments and the hardest to play. It consists of a long reed hollowed out, about half an inch in diameter and from two to three feet long. It has eight stops, but there is no sort of mouthpiece.

The sound is produced by the player blowing across the top of the flute at some particular angle which has never been able to discover, and producing the softest, saddest, deepest note one can possibly imagine.

To the most unusual, the sound of the long flute must appeal, and when accompanying one of those love ballads of the South it is enchanting.

These flutes are used to accompany many all kinds of songs, but chiefly those concerning the exploits of heroes and the love lays which hold such a big place in all Arab melodies. Occasionally it is used to follow religious chants, but not always—R. V. C. Bodley in "Algeria From Within."

Decoration Day

ONE of our most beautiful days is Memorial Day—it is our national day of remembrance.

It comes in early summer when blossoms are most beautiful.

The decorating of graves of our soldiers dead has become a regular custom.

In almost every city, village or hamlet churchyard in the land are to be found graves of comrades who died for the love of their country.

THE FOWLER RANGE OIL BURNER

THE FOWLER RANGE OIL BURNER has the following features, not found in other burners:

It is built for long life, the castings alone weighing approximately 20 pounds.

Has a 6 Gallon Galvanized Iron Tank; doing away with the small, objectionable glass bottles.

Each burner is equipped with a brass carburetor to regulate the flow. This is not used on other burners, and absolutely does away with air pockets in the oil lines.

Lights without priming, and produces a high temperature flame very quickly.

The Fowler Range Oil Burner is built for long life. Compare its heavy castings, all brass fittings and needle valves with any other burner on the market, and judge for yourself the great difference in durability.

America in Lead as User of Labor-Saving Devices

Hand-Tasks Still Popular in Europe; Continent Has Yet to See Its First Suction Cleaner for Heating Plants and Chimneys.

Americans traveling in Europe, and residents of this country whose early lives were spent abroad, think of the Old World as more than the site of superb monuments and art galleries, historical and religious shrines and magnificent pleasure places. They also dwell upon its quaint and picturesque ways of doing things, and the prevalence in everyday affairs of survivals of medieval manners.

Ancient cottages and manors—such as Haddon Hall where Dorothy Maude lived her high romance, and the delightful farmhouse of France, from the crannies of whose thatched roofs, moss and wild flowers grow—present a delightful contrast with the mechanical-looking, "black brand-new" dwelling house in this country.

Wood and stone still are carved by hand, and the smith still beats out graceful shapes in iron, for the cabinet-maker of the home, and despite the advancement of the machine age, many things with modern America accomplished mechanically still are arts of handicraft in Europe.

Old "Sweepers' Pictureque." Not, while all this has the great advantage of unaltered picturesqueness, it has disadvantages, too. For instance, there is the matter of chimney cleaning. In America the giant vacuum-cleaning machine has all but supplanted the old-time chimney sweep, whereas in Europe this dirty but extremely necessary job still is done entirely by manual labor.

Any morning the American traveler in Europe, be he in England, Germany, Switzerland or anywhere else, may see one or more of these strange figures in black hood, silk hat and laddered cap, with brooms and brushes, ropes and rods over their shoulders, ladder and soot bag under arm, scrambling down the street, calling their trade to the housewives.

Members on this page are shown pictures of chimney sweeps of several European countries. By way of contrast, also, is printed a photograph of one of the thousands of mechanically-operated "chimney cleaning machines" used throughout America, which does everything that any chimney sweep can do and a great deal more quickly and efficiently.

The National Institute of Thermal Engineering describes the suction cleaner for heating plants as an enlarged edition of the household vacuum cleaner adapted to the heating field. Usually it consists of a vacuum pump in the basement on a truck, a large canvas bag, and what appears to be long sections of flexible hose.

The motor operates a fan which,

(1) The typical English chimney-sweep, and (2) here's one not so typical—Mrs. Hannah Poole of Hollywood, Worcestershire, (not California!) the only woman who ever took up this ancient craft, she does it to support herself and her aged father. (3) Swiss sweeps wear hats—just because they always have. (4) This is the giant vacuum cleaner, modern America's improvement upon the old-world sweep. (5) And this is how a crew of German chimney-cleaners appear as they set out for a day's gambol over the housetops.

working through a "snake" formed of several sections of pipe attached to first one and then another of the heating plant openings, draws the accumulated dirt and soot out of the heater into the city dump, which is then taken to the city dump and emptied. The suction method is the best yet devised for cleaning both chimneys and heating plants, because it reaches the many nooks and crannies in the modern heating system that are beyond the reach of human hands. But one of the larger types of cleaners should be used for best results, since a small, improvised affair may lack both motor power and suction to do a spike and span job.

Motor-driven suction not only cleans the entire heating plant more completely and thoroughly than is possible by hand, and does it in a fraction of the time required by the manual method, but also does it without fuss, mess, dust or dirt—even while the decorator or landlady is working if that is desired.

Soot Proves Costly.

Dirty and sooty heating plants are fuel wasteful. With hot water and steam boilers, soot covering the boiler heating surfaces means loss of fuel. Soot-covered surfaces keep the heat away from the heat pipes so that it is wasted out of the chimney. Tests by the United States Bureau of Standards have shown that one eighth of an inch of soot on the heating surfaces of a central heating plant will reduce the plant's efficiency 25 per cent, while one-quarter of an inch will cut it down fully 48 per cent. So a thorough cleaning of the heater can easily save one or two tons of coal in the course of a winter.

Soot and obstructions in the heater and chimney interfere with efficient heating and are a source of fire hazard. Defective flues and heating plants comprise one of the chief causes of fire loss in the United States.

making up the menu—what fan it is! First she decides what is to be the main course of the meal and finds out in the cookbook how long this will take in the pressure cooker. Then she selects her vegetables and dessert, and before the meal is planned. It is to balance the food values properly, a salad is required, that can be prepared while the pressure cooker is doing its job and the worker has nothing to sit or to worry about, and it is then put back on the ice for chilling.

When the time is up, everything is perfectly cooked and ready for the table. The dessert can be left in the cooker, if it is meant to be served hot, or placed outside to cool.

This, of course, is only a short chapter in the story—once almost every the technique of pressure cooking. There are the economy of time and fuel, the ability to use cheaper cuts of meats, the retention of the full flavor of vegetables and of all those precious vitamins we have been warned to save, fewer pains to wash. With all these wonderful features, isn't it surprising that the bride doesn't have as many pressure cookers displayed on her gift table as she has cut-glass vases and silver candlesticks?

(5) National Method of Pressure Cooking. A Complete Cook Book at Once.

MYSTERY MELODRAMA AT LAKEWOOD NEXT WEEK

The vogue for mystery stories and plays will manifest itself at Lakewood next week in a diverting Broadway success entitled "Cock Robin." It was originally produced by Guthrie McClintock at the 48th Street Theatre, New York, and it is the joint work of two of America's ablest playwrights, Philip Barry and Elmer Rice. Mr. Barry and Mr. Rice have written any number of great plays, and they are now represented on Broadway with considerable distinction by "Holiday" and "Street Scene," two of the town's biggest hits. "Street Scene" has just won this year's Pulitzer Prize.

The play to which The Lakewood Players will lend their best efforts has to do with "Who killed Cock Robin?" and it was acclaimed by such critics as Alexander Woolcott, Percy Hammond, John Anderson, Robert Littell, and other well-known metropolitan judges of the drama, as one of the most engrossing and ingenious plays of last season.

Quite unlike the ordinary mystery play, it does not rely upon trap doors, shots in the dark and other mechanical devices to attain its thrilling effects. The murder is done in full view of the audience; there is no attempt to conceal the crime; and yet, only the shrewdest of playgoers with a keen sense of observation can name the guilty person. The audience, therefore, is the detective force and through three acts of suspense it weaves its web of evidence for the denouement. Nothing like "Cock Robin" has ever been seen at Lakewood.

"Cock Robin" will have the largest cast seen at the theatrical resort so far this season, bringing to the Lakewood stage for the first time the eminent Broadway star, Wm. Courtleigh. It will also serve to bring back to The Lakewood Players the young and accomplished actor, Humphrey Bogart, so well remembered from last season. The balance of the cast will consist of Frances Goodrich, Kathryn March, Thurston Hall, Houston Richards, Wallis Clark, Robert Hudson, Kathryn Keys, Ruth Garland, and Samuel T. Godfrey.

SAFETY CAMPAIGN

The Maine Central Railroad and the Maine Automobile Association which the State of Maine division of the American Automobile Association, cooperating this season in a campaign to eliminate grade crossing accidents in Maine, according to Safety Supervisor M. F. Dunn of Portland.

"Ten deaths was the toll of highway grade crossing accidents on the Maine Central in 1919," Mr. Dunn declares. "A most lamentable situation, as every single one of these accidents was totally unnecessary. Alertness on the part of motorists equal to that exercised by Maine Central engineers, can absolutely eliminate grade crossing accidents in Maine this season."

Through its manager, Frank E. Ballantyne of Portland, the Maine Automobile Association, is cooperating in the closest possible manner with the Maine Central in urging Maine motorists to study the causes of grade crossing accidents and is distributing through its members and with the aid of automobile dealers and garages over the State posters and literature dealing with this problem. Alorine Mr. Ballantyne believes, on the part of individual motorists can and will prevent highway crossing accidents.

Years of service in MODEL T FORDS

THE Model T was so strongly and sturdily built that it is still rendering reliable, economical service to motorists in every section of the country. Millions of these cars can be put in shape for two, three and five more years of use at very small cost.

So that you may have this work done economically and satisfactorily, the Ford Motor Company is still devoting a considerable section of its plants to the manufacture of Model T parts. It will continue to do so as long as they are needed by Model T owners. The following list gives the approximate labor charges for reconditioning the Model T Ford—

Engine
Time motor (including replacement of commutator case, brush and vibrator points if necessary)	$1.00
Grind valves and clean carbon	$3.75 to 4.00
Overhaul carburetor	1.50
Reline detachable car transmission bands	1.50
Install new pistons or connecting rods	6.00
Tighten all main bearings	6.00
Overhaul motor and transmission	$20.00 to 25.00
Rear System
Replace rear axle assembly	2.50
Install universal joint	3.00
Reline brake shoes	.75
Replace rear axle shaft, drive shaft pinion, or drive gear	1.50
Overhaul complete rear axle assembly	$5.75 to 7.00
Rebush spring and perches	1.75
Oil and graphite springs	3.00
Front System
Overhaul front axle	$4.00 to 5.00
Reline spindle bodies and arms (both sides)	2.50
Replace or straighten spindle connecting rod	.75
Tighten radius rod or steering ball cap	.50
Tighten all sockets and joints of front end	1.50
Replace front spring tie bolt or new leaf	2.50
Straighten front axle	3.00
Chassis
Replace rear fender	1.75
Overhaul steering gear	3.50
Repair muffler	1.00
Overhaul radiator	7.50
Repaint Coupe	25.00
Repaint Sedan	25.00
Repaint Touring Car	25.00
Reupholster Runabout	8.00
Reupholster Touring Car	15.00
Replace top deck (Coupe or Sedan)	4.00
Overhaul starting motor	3.00
Overhaul generator	2.60

These prices are approximate and are for labor only, because the need and number of new parts depend on the condition of each car. The charge for these parts is low, however, because of the established Ford policy of manufacturing and selling at a small margin of profit.

A Little Secret for the Bride

All Items of Meal Finished Together If Cooked Under Pressure.

The bride's cook, who has not heard of the pressure cooker, is always at a loss to know what to do with the large quantities of food that are to be served at the wedding. The pressure cooker is the answer. It is a small, compact, and efficient device that can be used to cook a large amount of food in a very short time. It is the only way to ensure that all the food is cooked at the same time and under the same conditions. The pressure cooker is a must for any bride who wants to have a perfect wedding meal.

SAFETY CAMPAIGN

The Central Railroad and the Automobile Association which is the Maine division of the National Automobile Association, are this season in a campaign for a grade crossing accident according to Safety Superintendent Dunn of Portland. This was the toll of highway accidents on the Maine coast last year. Mr. Dunn declares that the situation is as serious as any other situation. He says that these accidents were the result of carelessness on the part of the drivers. He says that the only way to prevent these accidents is by a campaign of education. the time while his men made for the galley. I ushered the two officers to the cabin. The one who stuck his head in first retreated holding his nose.

"What a h—ll of a smell!" "Excuse me, Mister Officer, but my stove is out of order. I could not know you gentlemen were giving me a visit today."

"Oh, never mind, captain, that's all right, that's all right." "I had purposely hung my underwear up to dry so it would be in their way and so that, in stooping to get under it, they would see the name 'Knudsen' embroidered on it. As the chief search officer crossed the cabin he suddenly saw my charming wife Josepha, with her blonde wig, her swollen jaw, and the rug hiding her big feet."

"Oh, excuse me." "That is my wife, Mister Officer. She has been having a bad go with the toothache."

"He was charming, just as most Englishmen are. He might have been talking to a court lady, instead of that rascal Schmidt."

"Sorry, madam, to intrude like this, but we must do our duty."

"All right!" said my lovely but somewhat distorted better half in a high falsetto voice out of one corner of her mouth.

"By Joe, captain, you haven't much cabin left, have you? You have been through some rough weather!"

"I wouldn't mind the rest, Mister Officer, but look at my papers. They are soaked, too."

"I can understand that, after the weather you've had."

"Yes, Mister Officer, it's all right for you to see them in this condition, because you saw the storm yourself, but later, if I meet some of your comrades who didn't hit the blow that we had, they may not take my word for it."

"Oh, don't worry, captain, I'll give you a memorandum explaining the condition of your papers. You are lucky to have saved your ship."

"That memorandum was just what I wanted. There was no telling when we might be searched again."

"I had the papers scattered all over the cabin to dry, and each time I handed one to him I spat a stream of tobacco juice on the cabin floor. He examined the papers with a practiced eye and made entries in his notebook. Each page in his book was for a ship and I could see that thirty or forty pages had been used already. Yes, he was an experienced officer."

"When he came to the last document, the one signed with the false signature of the British consul at Copenhagen and sealed with a false British Imperial seal, and read the formal statement that the firm's cargo of lumber was destined for the use of the British government in Australia. He turned to me suddenly."

"These papers are all right, captain."

"In the excitement of the moment I suddenly swallowed my chew of tobacco. I was afraid this might give our whole sham away. So I coughed and coughed as though with a bad cold, trying to cover up what had happened. What would a British search officer think if a Norwegian skipper got sick? My mate Leudemann was standing next to me holding the log book. I had told him to have it ready in case the Britisher should want to examine it. Leudemann saw there was something wrong with me, and was quick-witted enough to divert the search officer's attention, by handing him the book."

"Oh, yes, the log," exclaimed the officer, and opened the wet pages. The quid of tobacco seemed to be moving up and down my gullet. I struggled with myself, and to show an outward calm I said to Leudemann in Norwegian:

"I wish I had that officer's camel's hair cane and hood. It would have been fine to keep a fellow warm while up there north of the Circle."

"For rain and spray, too." The Englishman spoke up in Norwegian to show that he knew the language. You must admire how careful those English are. The officer examined every page of the log.

"How is this, captain?" he exclaimed. "You were laid up three weeks and a half?"

"There was a discrepancy in dates which necessitated our wait after the admiral had ordered us not to sail because of the return of the submarine, Deutschland, and the consequent increased vigilance of the blockade. I had not thought of it. Here was the one detail that we had neglected to provide for in our elaborately detailed preparations. Even if I had been in the best of health, I should not have known what to reply. With that tobacco quid running around the side of my body I could only pray to God for help."

Again Leudemann saved the situation. He was a little fellow and simple-hearted, but a great character. When bad times came, Leudemann was at his best.

"We didn't lie there for pleasure," he said in his dry way as he looked up at the big Englishman. "We had orders from our owner not to sail until we got word."

"Haven't you been warned then about German cruisers?"

"What's that?"

"Haven't you heard about the Maoya and auxiliary cruiser, See Adler?"

The search officer turned to me. "What about this that your mate is saying, captain?"

My stomach felt much better, now that Leudemann had spoken. So I thought I might as well give the Englishman a good dose.

"There were rumors at home in Norway that the two cruisers and sixteen German submarines had put out of port."

The search officer's comrade, who had been looking around the cabin, came over to us when he heard all this.

"I think we had better be going," he spoke up suddenly.

"Yes," replied the other, and they went on deck.

They made no attempt at questioning the sailors or investigating the sailors' belongings.

"Your papers are all right, captain," said the search officer, "but you will have to wait here for an hour until you get a signal to proceed."

"All right, Mister Officer."

One of my boys, who was of a pessimistic turn of mind, heard this. As he walked away from my cabin he said out loud to himself:

"Everything is lost."

Down below were the members of my other crew, waiting in the dark. They were right beneath the floor of the deck, straining their ears to catch any word that might give them an idea how things were going on deck. They heard the exclamation, "Everything is lost," and took it for the official word that we were discovered and for the command to do what was to be done in that case. They lit the fuses of the three bombs that were to blow up the ship, and waited for the batteries to be opened to let them on deck to the boats. The fuses would burn for fifteen minutes.

The British were in their boat now, trying to push off. But you can't head a sailing ship in one place like a steamer. She keeps drifting. And the section of the Seeadler as she drifted held their boat so it couldn't get away. What was still worse, it kept slipping out, and if it got under our stern, they would have been sure to see our propeller. A sailship with a propeller? Yes, sometimes, but we would have been done for, as there was nothing to that effect in our papers. Seizing a rope, I tossed it overboard to ward them.

"Take the rope, Mister Officer, take the rope," I shouted as though clumsy "trying to help them."

That made them look up, so that the rope might not fall on their heads. I leaved the rope just as they were sliding around our stern and away. The officers thanked me, and one of them, angry with his men for not being able to push the boat off, exclaimed:

"I have only focus on my boat."

"Yes, maybe you have," I thought. "and maybe you are the worst focused one of all."

My stomach was quite normal now. I was so happy that I even felt as though I could digest that quid of tobacco. The men on deck felt like cheering and singing, but they had orders to go on about their jobs as though nothing unusual had been going on until the cruiser was far and away. They just grinned but as broad were the grins that I thought they would split their faces.

My first thought was to bring the tappy news to the boys in the darkness down below. I went to one of the secret hatches, which they had fastened from within.

"Open," I shouted.

There were vague sounds below. "Open up," I called again. Then I heard a muffled voice say: "Open the flood valves."

"What's that?" I yelled. "What's the matter? Open the hatch?"

The hatch opened. I saw troubled faces. I could hear water rushing in to the ship.

"By Joe," I shouted. "are you trying to sink my boat?"

I could hear men running below to all parts of the ship. I climbed down roaring. One of the men spoke up. "They are cutting the fuses and closing the flood valves."

"Fuses, flood valves, by Joe. How's that happen, by Joe?"

Then one of the men said: "But some one called down that all was lost. Afterward you called 'open' and we thought you meant open the flood valves."

The fuses had been burning for about minutes out of their fifteen, and hundreds of gallons of water were pouring into the ship.

By Joe, I looked for the fellow who said "All is lost." He came forward at once and confessed.

"I wasn't calling to the men below. I merely said it to myself."

"Why do you say 'all is lost,' by Joe, just when everything is fine?"
